CHALONER DENIES HE IS ECCENTRIC

Is Somewhat Original, but Not What Courier-Journal Paints Him.

MAKES REPLY TO EDITORIAL

Ghost of Stanford White Due to Appear in Thompson's Hall.

Reply was made by John Armstrong Chaloner in his speech at Thompson's Hall last night to an editorial recently printed in the Louisville Courier-Journal.

In addition Mr. Chaloner read his letter to Colonel Henry Watterson and offered comments on the affair.

His hall was again well filled, and Mr. Chaloner promised to keep up his meetings all the winter. He said the series would resemble the Arabian Nights or Monte Cristo for interest.

Four statements made in the editorial in question were challenged. One of these was the effect that the speaker had changed his name from Chaloner to Chalner to spite members of his family. In reply he said the name was originally Chaloner in Wales, and it became corrupted into Chalner in the course of centuries, so that he merely restored the original. Again, he said spite was not the reason, although he wished to keep up the breach between himself and the name and his two brothers and cousin on the other. In this connection he was especially severe in using the name of one brother, former Lieutenant-Governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chalner.

Is Not Eccentric. Again, the Courier-Journal had said: "In Virginia he figures as an eccentric person." Mr. Chaloner denounced this as a lie, saying he might be somewhat original. But he denied he was "dippy or nutty," and referred to any one who pictures him in such light, in view of the judgment of the Albemarle court, which declared him sane, as "a liar, cad and blackguard."

Further, the editorial, said Mr. Chaloner, has "a mania for self-exploitation." Mr. Chaloner said that he had been in the public eye for the last eleven years of silence under "blackguardly, ruffianly, illiterate editorial abuse."

The fourth point of reply to the editorial was the meat of the editorial—attacking the habit of the Northern press in bestowing high social position on nearly any one whose name gets into headlines in the South. A motley aristocracy, he said, "figures as a print without playing a part in the social life of the South."

Southern Ancestors. Mr. Chaloner said he was more Southern than Northern, that his maternal ancestors lived in Charleston, S. C., and that his paternal grandfather was an Episcopal minister there. "And," he added, "no society will exclude a member of the Episcopal Church."

First telling how he had learned inclusive at the feet of "Mare Henry," Mr. Chaloner read his letter in reply. He had something to say about other newspaper men, including one in especial, who received some solemn advice. Newspaper editors, he said, will not publish replies which get next to their hides. "They sit as gods in their statures and fire cayenne pepper in our eyes and have no regrets. They have a code of honor. So have thieves. Lawyers will sometimes rob lawyers, but thieves won't rob thieves. Editors will not print news of libel suits against members of the profession, unless a prominent person is involved, so as to make it important news. And they will not print anything about each other's personal habits."

In the part of his address which referred to his experience in Bloomington, Mr. Chaloner said that the ghost of Stanford White, who was slain by Harry Thaw, will come up through the trapdoor and appear on the stage at Thompson's Hall many times during the series of meetings. He told of a conversation between Stanford White and himself in the asylum. At the next meeting, he promised, he will tell of a fight with a keeper.
